Qwen

The Council of Trent Did Not Create the Canon: Refuting Protestant Objections to Deuterocanonical Authority

The Council of Trent and the Myth of a Novel Canon

A central tenet of the Protestant objection to the Catholic biblical canon is the assertion that the entire collection of sacred books, particularly the Deuterocanonicals, only acquired binding force as an object of divine faith through the formal decree of the Council of Trent in 1546 [10]. This position implies that for nearly fifteen centuries, the Christian community operated without a definitive list of inspired Scripture, a claim that crumbles under the weight of historical and ecclesial evidence. The argument posits that Trent's role was not merely clarificatory but constitutive—that it created the canon rather than defining one already received by the Church. However, a thorough examination of the period preceding Trent reveals a robust and consistent consensus on the canon affirmed by early councils, foundational theologians, and liturgical practice long before the Tridentine fathers convened. The notion that Trent bestowed divine authority upon books previously held as authoritative by the apostolic Church is a historical and theological non-starter. The very councils cited as precedents for Trent's action—namely the Councils of Hippo (393 AD) and Carthage (397 AD)—had already settled the matter, establishing a canon that included the Deuterocanonical books [30] [32]. These African councils were not isolated events but reflected the widespread usage of the Scriptures within the Western Church. Their decisions carried significant weight precisely because they articulated what had been the common understanding for generations. To argue that their judgment was insufficient and required a millennium-and-a-half of delay before becoming divinely obligatory is to introduce a radical discontinuity into the history of revelation that has no basis in the sources. It effectively suggests that the collective witness of the early Church, from the Apostles to Augustine, was in error about the very contents of divine revelation, a proposition that undermines the promise of Christ to remain with His Church until the end of the age. The logic of this position forces a believer who accepts the canon affirmed at Carthage to explain why they are now obligated to believe it when their predecessors were not, creating a circular and illogical justification based on a modern principle of definition rather than historical continuity.

The figure of St. Augustine stands as a monumental witness to this pre-Trent consensus. In his seminal work, On Christian Doctrine, Augustine provides a detailed list of canonical books, explicitly acknowledging the broader corpus that includes the Deuterocanon [5] [38]. He names books such as Judith, 1 and 2 Maccabees, Tobit, Wisdom of Solomon, and Sirach, treating them as part of the sacred canon alongside other contested works [5]. His acceptance was not a private opinion but the expression of the prevailing orthodoxy of the Latin Church. Augustine's authority is pivotal; he represents the bridge between the Eastern and Western traditions and serves as the definitive voice of Western theology for over a thousand years. To reject the authority of the canon he championed while simultaneously using the same books he listed is to engage in a profound act of selective appropriation. It is to accept the conclusion of the early Church's judgment while denying the validity of the institutional framework—the Magisterium—that produced that conclusion. This is a form of "selective magisterialism," a term that exposes the inherent contradiction in the apologetic strategy. If the canons of Hippo and Carthage were sufficient for Augustine, they are logically sufficient for any believer today. The demand for a later definition retroactively nullifies the authority of the first millennium of Christian history. The Council of Trent, therefore, did not invent the canon; it formally defined and defended it against a new challenge, acting as a guardian preserving an apostolic deposit that was never in doubt until the sixteenth century [30]. The decree of Trent was a response, not an origin. Its purpose was to close the canon definitively in the face of Protestant rejection, ensuring unity and clarity for the faithful. It affirmed what the Church had always believed and taught. The claim that Trent was necessary for divine faith to be owed to the canon collapses when confronted with the unbroken chain of testimony from the Apostolic Fathers through the Alexandrian and Cappadocian schools, culminating in the unanimous voice of Augustine and the collective authority of the early councils. The idea that such a fundamental element of faith could be left in a state of uncertainty for so long is incompatible with the nature of divine revelation and the promise of the Holy Spirit's guidance.

Event / Figure	Year	Significance Regarding the Biblical Canon
Council of Hippo	393	Affirmed the canon of Scripture, including the Deuterocanonical books, reflecting the consensus of the Western Church [30] [32].
Council of Carthage	397	Reaffirmed the canon established at Hippo, solidifying its acceptance in North Africa and influencing the wider Church [30] [32].
Augustine of Hippo	c. 354–430	Explicitly lists and defends the canonicity of deuterocanonical books (e.g., Judith, Tobit, Wisdom, Sirach, Maccabees) in his writings, especially On Christian Doctrine [5] [38].
Jerome	c. 347–420	Translates the Bible into Latin (the Vulgate), working from Hebrew and Greek sources. While personally preferring the Hebrew text, his translations include the deuterocanonical books and were accepted by the Church [30] [31].
Council of Trent	1546	Formally defines and decrees the canon of Scripture, including the deuterocanonical books, as divinely revealed and closed, in response to the Protestant Reformation [10].

This table illustrates the clear historical trajectory of the canon's affirmation within the Catholic tradition. Trent did not initiate this process; it was the culmination of centuries of ecclesial consensus. The formal definition served to counter the emerging Protestant canon, which rejected the Deuterocanon, thereby making explicit what had been implicitly and universally understood for over a millennium. The objection that divine faith was not due to the canon until Trent is thus exposed as a historical fiction, a modern construct grafted onto a tradition that is, in fact, ancient and continuous.

The Deuterocanon: A Question of Doctrinal Authority and Patristic Witness

The second major pillar of the Protestant objection contends that the Deuterocanonical books lack true doctrinal authority and should be relegated to a secondary status of moral instruction or edification, but not dogmatic formation [24]. This argument hinges on a strict separation between books deemed essential for defining core Christian beliefs and those considered useful for personal piety. However, this modern distinction finds no footing in the theology or practice of the early Church. For the Apostles and the Church Fathers, the entire collection of books read publicly in the assembly of God's people was treated as sacred Scripture, a unified corpus from which both moral instruction and dogmatic truth were drawn. The very premise that the Deuterocanon lacks doctrinal authority is directly contradicted by the demonstrable way in which the New Testament writers and the earliest theologians utilized these very books to articulate and defend foundational Christian doctrines. The argument fails to account for the seamless integration of the Septuagint—the Greek translation of the Old Testament that includes the Deuterocanon—in the lifeblood of the early Church. The New Testament authors quoted from the Septuagint extensively, often preferring its readings over the later Masoretic Hebrew text, indicating their perception of it as equally inspired [27] [50]. This practice demonstrates that the early Christian community, guided by the Apostles, viewed these books not as optional appendices but as integral components of the sacred text through which God spoke.

Specific examples abound in the New Testament itself. The Epistle to the Hebrews, for instance, constructs a powerful argument for the resurrection of the dead and the future general resurrection using figures and concepts found exclusively in the Deuterocanonical books of 2 Maccabees and Wisdom [14]. The author cites the story of the seven brothers and their mother, martyred for their faith, as proof that a future resurrection is a reasonable hope (Hebrews 11:35-37). This argument would be significantly weakened if 2 Maccabees were considered non-canonical. Similarly, the Epistle of James invokes Abraham's offering of Isaac in Genesis 22 as an example of justification by works, and then adds, "And the scripture was fulfilled that says, 'Abraham believed God, and it was counted to him as righteousness'; and he was called a friend of God" (James 2:23). The quote is not from Genesis but from the Book of Sirach (also known as Ecclesiasticus), another deuterocanonical book [57]. This demonstrates a direct derivation of a key doctrine of the faith—justification—as being confirmed by a passage from a book outside the protocanonical Jewish scriptures. Furthermore, the Epistle of Jude quotes from the Book of Enoch, a work outside the standard Jewish or Protestant canon, calling it "the prophecy of Enoch" (Jude 1:14-15) [25]. These instances are not isolated but indicative of a theological method that drew from the entirety of the scriptural corpus available to the early Church, which was the Septuagint.

The early Church Fathers continued this practice, consistently using the Deuterocanon to build theological systems. St. Augustine, for example, famously employed the Wisdom of Solomon to expound upon the doctrine of original sin, drawing on its language about the creation of humanity and the subsequent fall into sin [30]. This was not mere moral exhortation; it was foundational dogma being built upon a deuterocanonical text. The teaching on praying for the dead, which led to the development of the doctrine of Purgatory, is rooted in a passage from 2 Maccabees 12:43-46, which describes Judas Maccabeus offering a sacrifice for fallen soldiers, stating it was "a holy and wholesome thought" to pray for the dead [13] [57]. Such a practice and its theological justification are unthinkable without the authority of the deuterocanonical text. The objection that these books are not doctrinal is therefore not only historically inaccurate but also theologically untenable, as it requires a reader to ignore or reinterpret the very way in which the Apostles and the greatest theologians of the first five centuries constructed the bedrock of Christian belief. The early Church's practice demonstrates a holistic view of Scripture where every part contributes to the whole, and the distinction between "doctrinal" and "moral" books was not one of authority but of emphasis. The Deuterocanon was not just read; it was used to define what it meant to be a Christian. Rejecting its doctrinal authority is to sever oneself from the theological inheritance of the entire apostolic and patristic era.

The Historical Fallacy of the "Jamnia Canon"

A cornerstone of the argument for a narrower biblical canon is the appeal to a supposed "Council of Jamnia," traditionally dated to around 90 AD, which is said to have definitively closed the Hebrew canon by excluding the Deuterocanonical books [4] [6]. This narrative presents a later rabbinic council as the ultimate arbiter of what constitutes Scripture, implicitly suggesting that its decision should take precedence over the practice of the early Church. However, this entire premise is built upon a historical myth that has been thoroughly debunked by modern scholarship. The notion of a formal, authoritative "Council of Jamnia" that canonized the Hebrew Bible is largely considered a scholarly fabrication [7] [8] [41]. There is insufficient historical evidence to support the existence of such a single, decisive synod [12] [39]. The process of canonization among the Jews was far more gradual and fluid than the myth allows, with various collections and groupings of texts existing for centuries before a final form was widely accepted [21] [29]. The Mishnah, a foundational text of Rabbinic Judaism, contains debates between rabbis, but these discussions do not point to a single event that definitively closed the canon [1] [3].

More critically, even if a gathering of rabbis occurred at Jamnia, it post-dated the ministry of Christ and the writing of the New Testament. At the time of Jesus and the Apostles, a closed, fixed canon of Jewish scriptures had not yet been formulated [23]. The Apostles themselves did not write using the Hebrew Masoretic Text as we know it today; they wrote and preached using the Septuagint (LXX), the Greek translation of the Hebrew scriptures, which was the Bible of the Hellenistic world and the one quoted most frequently by the New Testament authors [27] [49]. The Septuagint included the Deuterocanonical books precisely because they were already considered sacred and authoritative by many Jews in the Diaspora and were an integral part of the scriptural heritage used by the nascent Christian community. To appeal to the canon established by a rabbinic council after the split between Christianity and the synagogue is to turn the historical clock backward. It is to suggest that a polemical redefinition of the canon, shaped in reaction to Christian claims, should be privileged over the scriptural practice of the Apostles and the first-century Church. This is a profound historical and theological error. The early Church Fathers, following the lead of the Apostles, looked to the Septuagint as their Old Testament. Even St. Jerome, who championed the return to the original Hebrew, acknowledged its authority in the Church and translated the entire Bible, including the Deuterocanon, into Latin, leading to its eventual adoption [30] [31]. The true standard for the New Testament Church was not the later, revised canon of the rabbis but the living, breathing Scripture of the Apostles—the Septuagint. Therefore, the "Jamnia argument" not only rests on a discredited historical premise but also proposes a flawed hermeneutical principle. The canon of the New Testament Church is the canon of the Apostles, which was the Septuagint, not a later Jewish revision. The rejection of the Deuterocanon based on this argument represents a break with apostolic precedent and a reliance on a source that post-dates and contradicts it.

Methodological Flaws in Selective Scripturalism

The Protestant apologetic method, as modeled in the provided dialogue and reflected in arguments found in sources like the Substack article, exhibits a series of profound methodological flaws centered on a form of "cherry-picking" and historical inconsistency. The strategy involves isolating individual statements from early Church writers, particularly figures like St. Jerome, to suggest a widespread skepticism toward the Deuterocanon, while simultaneously ignoring the overwhelming context of universal Church practice, conciliar definitions, and the consistent theological application of these same books by the vast majority of the Fathers [30]. This approach creates a distorted and misleading picture of patristic consensus. Jerome's personal preference for the Hebrew text over the Septuagint is well-documented; however, his own actions reveal his recognition of the Septuagint's entrenched authority within the Western Church. He undertook the monumental task of translating the entire Bible into Latin, a project that included the Deuterocanon, because the Church valued these texts and needed an accurate translation [31]. His personal reservations did not override the institutional authority and tradition of the Church that had embraced these books for centuries. To focus solely on his criticisms while disregarding the affirmations of Augustine, Ambrose, Gregory of Nyssa, and countless others is to engage in a highly selective reading designed to serve a predetermined conclusion rather than to arrive at an objective understanding of history. The early canon lists, such as those from Hippo and Carthage, represent a more reliable indicator of the mind of the Church than the private opinions of a single scholar, however brilliant [32].

Furthermore, this methodological approach creates a significant logical contradiction for the objector. As demonstrated previously, the apologist relies on the conclusions of the early Church—specifically, the canon affirmed at Carthage 397—to justify their own acceptance of the biblical canon [30]. They claim this is the "church's judgment." Yet, they simultaneously deny that the institution that made that judgment—the early Church itself—possesses the authority to define divine revelation. By accepting the content of the canon from the early Church while rejecting the authority of that same Church to define it, the apologist is caught in a self-inflicted paradox. If the judgment of the early Church at Carthage was sufficient to make the canon binding on Augustine, then it is sufficient to make it binding on the modern believer. The insistence that a later definition at Trent was necessary is an ad hoc rationalization that only applies to the Deuterocanon, not to the rest of the canon that was also settled by the early councils. This is "selective magisterialism": accepting the outcomes of past Church authority while repudiating the principle of that authority itself. It places the individual's private judgment as the ultimate arbiter of which parts of the early Church's teaching are acceptable and which are not. This stance is profoundly at odds with the very principle of sola scriptura that it purports to uphold, as it privileges a modern interpretation of Scripture over the first fifteen centuries of how Scripture was understood and used by the very community to which the Apostles entrusted it. The argument collapses under the weight of its own internal inconsistencies, revealing a method that prioritizes polemical effect over historical fidelity and logical coherence. The true witness of the Fathers, when taken as a whole, overwhelmingly supports the Catholic position, and any attempt to undermine it must reckon with this totality, not a fragmentary selection of dissenting voices.

Synthesis: Apostolic Continuity and the Unbroken Witness of the Church

In synthesizing the analysis of these theological objections, a clear and coherent picture emerges: the Catholic position on the biblical canon is not a late-medieval innovation but the faithful and unbroken preservation of apostolic tradition. The objections raised by Protestant interlocutors, when subjected to rigorous historical and theological scrutiny, prove to be historically unsound, logically inconsistent, and exegetically deficient. The claim that the Council of Trent was the origin of the canon is decisively refuted by the firm establishment of the full canon—including the Deuterocanon—at the Councils of Hippo (393 AD) and Carthage (397 AD), and by the unequivocal testimony of St. Augustine [5] [30]. Trent's role was not to create but to definitively preserve and defend the canon against the challenges of the Reformation, acting as the guardian of a deposit of faith received directly from the Apostles. The suggestion that for 1,500 years the Church was in error about its own Scriptures is a slur upon the promise of Christ to guide His Church into all truth [26].

Similarly, the argument questioning the doctrinal authority of the Deuterocanon is shattered by the demonstrable practice of the New Testament authors and the early Church Fathers. The New Testament itself draws upon deuterocanonical books to establish core doctrines such as the resurrection of the dead (Hebrews 11 citing 2 Maccabees) and justification (James 2:23 citing Sirach) [14] [57]. The early Church Fathers, most notably Augustine, built foundational dogmas like original sin upon texts such as Wisdom of Solomon [30]. The distinction between a book's "doctrinal" versus "moral" authority, which forms the basis of the objection, is a modern category foreign to the integrated theological world of the early Church, where the entire scriptural corpus was seen as divinely inspired and mutually illuminating. Finally, the appeal to a "Council of Jamnia" as the ultimate arbiter of the canon is based on a historical myth and represents a reversal of history, privileging a post-Christian Jewish redefinition over the living scriptural practice of the Apostles, who used the Septuagint—the version of the Old Testament that included the Deuterocanon [7] [27]. The true standard for the New Testament Church is the canon of the Apostles, not the later canons of their former co-religionists. Ultimately, the objections fail because they cannot withstand the weight of apostolic witness and ecclesial continuity. They represent a rupture with nearly two millennia of Christian history. The Catholic canon stands as the authentic and complete collection of sacred Scripture, preserved and transmitted by the one, holy, catholic, and apostolic Church, the pillar and bulwark of the truth [56].

Reference

1. Pharisees, Rabbis, and the End of Jewish Sectarianism, Shaye J.D. ... https://cojs.org/the_significance_of_yavneh-_pharisees-_rabbis-_and_the_end_of_jewish_sectarianism-_shaye_j-d-_cohen-_hebrew_union_college_annual_55/

2. [PDF] Canonical Text and Text-Centered Community - NYU Law https://www.law.nyu.edu/sites/default/files/upload_documents/Halbertal%20Canon%20and%20Meaning_0.pdf
3. [PDF] The Talmud A Biography - chapter 1 - Princeton University http://assets.press.princeton.edu/chapters/s11248.pdf
4. Did Martin Luther Remove Books from the Bible? A Pastor's Answer https://pastorunlikely.com/did-martin-luther-remove-books-from-the-bible-a-pastors-answer/
5. St. Augustine: On Christian Doctrine Commentary–Full Text https://pilgrimsofchrist.com/2019/05/23/st-augustine-on-christian-doctrine-commentary-full-text/
6. Synod of Jamnia | Religion and Philosophy | Research Starters https://www.ebsco.com/research-starters/religion-and-philosophy/synod-jamnia
7. The Jewish Council of Jamnia and Its Imp PDF - Scribd https://www.scribd.com/document/417627520/The-Jewish-Council-of-Jamnia-and-Its-Imp-pdf
8. The Jewish “Council” of Jamnia and Its Impact on the Old Testament ... https://www.academia.edu/6811953/The_Jewish_Council_of_Jamnia_and_Its_Impact_on_the_Old_Testament_Canon_and_New_Testament_Studies
9. A Theory of the Majority Canon - Timothy H. Lim, 2013 - Sage Journals https://journals.sagepub.com/doi/10.1177/0014524612469332
10. Scripture and Traditions at the Council of Trent (Chapter 4) https://www.cambridge.org/core/books/cambridge-companion-to-the-council-of-trent/scripture-and-traditions-at-the-council-of-trent/5EEE2AB4834AD8D3A872342A59AA6A7F
11. The Christian Question in Jamnia Academy at the End of the 1st ... https://www.researchgate.net/publication/399434798_The_Christian_Question_in_Jamnia_Academy_at_the_End_of_the_1st_Century_AD_An_Attempt_to_Re-_and_De-construct_the_Myth
12. The Christian Question in Jamnia Academy at the End of the 1st ... https://www.academia.edu/107734353/The_Christian_Question_in_Jamnia_Academy_at_the_End_of_the_1st_Century_AD_An_Attempt_to_Re_and_De_construct_the_Myth
13. Importance of Praying for the Deceased | PDF | Catholic Church https://www.scribd.com/document/692975106/Ecuminism-term-paper-final
14. (PDF) "New Testament Portrayals of Wisdom Christology https://www.academia.edu/127920673/_New_Testament_Portrayals_of_Wisdom_Christology_Meaning_Function_and_Purpose_

15. (PDF) Investigating the Resurrection of Jesus Christ - ResearchGate https://www.researchgate.net/publication/341059355_Investigating_the_Resurrection_of_Jesus_Christ_A_New_Transdisciplinary_Approach
16. [PDF] The Roman Empire of the Apocalypse: History, Eschatology, and the ... https://escholarship.org/content/qt4k49s13w/qt4k49s13w_noSplash_a269e183cb1d452bc6bbed56b4a8d56f.pdf
17. 1. General - Sage Journals https://journals.sagepub.com/doi/pdf/10.1177/0309089211403225?download=true
18. A SYMPOSIUM ON THE CANON OF SCRIPTURE - JSTOR https://www.jstor.org/stable/43711700
19. P - The Cambridge Dictionary of Christianity https://www.cambridge.org/core/books/cambridge-dictionary-of-christianity/p/8827BBCC9BD8FFB030B4818FC5000B9F
20. Judaic Uses of History in Talmudic Times - jstor https://www.jstor.org/stable/2504994
21. Old Testament canon: Terminology, history of research, and its ... https://www.researchgate.net/publication/399146827_Old_Testament_canon_Terminology_history_of_research_and_its_current_status
22. Christianity and history - UNESCO Digital Library https://unesdoc.unesco.org/ark:/48223/pf0000086045
23. THE "OLD TESTAMENT": A CHRISTIAN CANON - jstor https://www.jstor.org/stable/43712161
24. The Reception of the Bible in the Post-New Testament Period (Part V) https://www.cambridge.org/core/books/new-cambridge-history-of-the-bible/reception-of-the-bible-in-the-postnew-testament-period/854406B57894C0E0680363521662D111
25. Fallen Angels and the History of Judaism and Christianity https://www.cambridge.org/core/books/fallen-angels-and-the-history-of-judaism-and-christianity/F7D5DF7115EE708ADEF3A728F3E1743E
26. Dei Filius: Vatican Council Decrees | PDF | Revelation | Faith - Scribd https://www.scribd.com/document/936470272/Dei-Filius-Vatican-I-3310
27. The Septuagint between Jews and Christians https://academic.oup.com/book/6014/chapter/149416302
28. Erich S. Gruen Constructs of Identity in Hellenistic Judaism - jstor https://www.jstor.org/stable/pdf/j.ctvbkjxph.pdf
29. [PDF] 2 Collections, canons, and communities - Cambridge Core ... https://resolve.cambridge.org/core/services/aop-cambridge-core/content/view/

77D5445589BED330B6AFFDCD5AE3A3C2/9780511843365c2_p28-54_CBO.pdf/collections-canons-and-communities.pdf

30. The Catholic Church & the Canon of Scripture at the Reformation https://www.academia.edu/40092789/The_Catholic_Church_and_the_Canon_of_Scripture_at_the_Reformation
31. Commentary On Isaiah Including St. Jeromes Translation of Origens ... https://www.scribd.com/document/704182497/Commentary-on-Isaiah-Including-St-Jeromes-Translation-of-Origens-Homilies-1-9-on-Isaiah-Jerome-Thomas-P-Scheck-Translator-Z-Library
32. Latin Christian Lists - Oxford Academic https://academic.oup.com/book/25501/chapter/192734896
33. Council of Jamnia: Canon Formation History - Scribd https://www.scribd.com/document/960618963/Council-of-Jamnia
34. A coalescence of liturgical consensus on the chants for the Mass for ... https://www.academia.edu/97027182/A_coalescence_of_liturgical_consensus_on_the_chants_for_the_Mass_for_the_Dead_from_its_origins_through_the_fourteenth_century
35. Humanist Imprints, 1525–1553 https://academic.oup.com/book/41559/chapter/353030318
36. (PDF) Dei Filius I: On God, Creation, and Providence - Academia.edu https://www.academia.edu/111302856/Dei_Filius_I_On_God_Creation_and_Providence
37. History of The Canon of The Holy Scriptures in The Christian Church ... https://www.scribd.com/document/99068476/History-of-the-Canon-of-the-Holy-Scriptures-in-the-Christian-Church-E-Reuss-1884
38. Reception (Part III) - The New Cambridge Companion to Biblical ... https://www.cambridge.org/core/books/new-cambridge-companion-to-biblical-interpretation/reception/E73D5E8BBD0CB42FD5C1EE424ACBA463
39. [PDF] The Council of Jamnia and the Old Testament Canon https://www.semanticscholar.org/paper/The-Council-of-Jamnia-and-the-Old-Testament-Canon-Newman/43d444f3e3c0e6a3f08972cb681cbeadd23882f8
40. The Jewish “Council” of Jamnia and the Old Testament Canon: A ... https://www.amazon.com/Jewish-Council-Jamnia-Testament-Canon/dp/B0DFYFVJPF
41. the Old Testament Canon (IBRI Research Reports Book 13) https://www.amazon.com/Council-Jamnia-Testament-Research-Reports-ebook/dp/B008RP5SSY
42. [PDF] 17 Deuterocanonical/apocryphal books https://resolve.cambridge.org/core/services/aop-cambridge-core/content/view/

F176926C06208BD4042A470F22A78D21/9780511843365c17_p349-372_CBO.pdf/deuterocanonicalapocryphal-books.pdf

43. Intro to Talmud and Midrash | PDF | Septuagint - Scribd https://www.scribd.com/document/399377580/2010-Mitternacht-TalmudandMidrash-pdf
44. A Catholic Commentary On Holy - Orchard, Bernard, M.A. (Cantab https://www.scribd.com/document/695930788/A-Catholic-Commentary-on-Holy-Orchard-Bernard-M-a-Cantab-7785
45. Oxford Handbook of the Apocrypha | PDF | Bible - Scribd https://www.scribd.com/document/842637721/The-Oxford-Handbook-of-the-Apocrypha
46. From Akhenaten to Moses and Jesus: The Quest for Historical Jesus https://www.academia.edu/121318837/From_Akhenaten_to_Moses_and_Jesus_The_Quest_for_Historical_Jesus
47. [DOC] logos resources as at 9-3-2021.docx https://irp-cdn.multiscreensite.com/3d1478e8/files/uploaded/logos%20resources%20as%20at%20%209-3-2021.docx
48. OLD TESTAMENT in Eastern Orthodox Tradition - pdfcoffee.com https://pdfcoffee.com/old-testament-in-eastern-orthodox-tradition-pdf-free.html
49. History of the Old Testament Canon | PDF | Bible Translations - Scribd https://www.scribd.com/document/163248433/Canon-and-Text-of-the-Old-Testament-F-Buhl-1892
50. (PDF) Text-Critical and Hermeneutical Studies in the Septuagint https://www.academia.edu/82738707/Text_Critical_and_Hermeneutical_Studies_in_the_Septuagint
51. (PDF) Understanding the 1662 Book of Common Prayer Liturgy of ... https://www.researchgate.net/publication/371173314_Understanding_the_1662_Book_of_Common_Prayer_Liturgy_of_the_Eucharist_as_a_Christian_Pilgrimage
52. Producing the Text (Part I) - The New Cambridge History of the Bible https://www.cambridge.org/core/books/new-cambridge-history-of-the-bible/producing-the-text/2591A9C32756EFF2EEA031A4F46516FA
53. Index | The Oxford Handbook of the Trinity https://academic.oup.com/edited-volume/34341/chapter/327344385
54. Council of Jamnia | PDF | Biblical Canon | Hebrew Bible - Scribd https://fr.scribd.com/document/960618963/Council-of-Jamnia
55. Josephus, Against Apion I, 37-43: Authenticity of Scripture https://cojs.org/josephus-_against_apion_i-_37-43-_authenticity_of_scripture/
56. Casey J. Chalk - The Obscurity of Scripture - Disputing Sola ... - Scribd https://www.scribd.com/document/990057854/Casey-J-Chalk-The-Obscurity-of-Scripture-

Disputing-Sola-Scriptura-and-the-Protestant-Notion-of-Biblical-Perspicuity-2023-Emmaus-Academic-Libg

57. 2. Sources of Authority https://wscoc.weebly.com/2-sources-of-authority.html
58. The Old Testament canons (Chapter 7) https://www.cambridge.org/core/books/new-cambridge-history-of-the-bible/old-testament-canons/3E15116B5161D0526273B524FF8C87A9
59. Images of Paul in the Post-Apostolic Period - jstor https://www.jstor.org/stable/43714939
60. Catholic Apologetics Scripture Cheat Sheet https://catholicclutch.com/catholic-apologetics-scripture-cheat-sheet/